

I'm a ham and also an internet user. I don't want to hear any more interference on my ham bands. I couldn't believe that this interference would be permitted. My whole licencing education was geared to the effect of not letting this type of interference occur. How is it even possible that the ruling governmental agency (FCC) could let something like this happen? Don't they have to qualify in some way to be on the FCC like someone lower who has to follow their rules. Or is this another example of placing stupid management over intellegent employees? Anyway, don't let this happen.
